Aidan Reynolds

Aidan Reynolds grew up in Riverview, NB, and has been a member of the Coverdale Albert County 4-H Club since he was 11 years old.

Throughout his time in 4-H, Aidan has participated in numerous events, competed in provincial 4-H competitions, completed several projects, and managed the club's finances as Treasurer. He credits 4-H for teaching him valuable life skills, such as leadership, communication, financial management, networking, and teamwork.

Aidan's 4-H experience inspired him to take an active role in his high school and community. As a Junior Leader for the Town of Riverview, Aidan volunteered in various capacities, including teaching seniors safe use of computers and the internet, assisting with youth camps, and preparing for community festivals.

Aidan has also participated in numerous local youth committees within the Greater Moncton area, plus volunteered with the Boys and Girls Club of Riverview's recycling program. At school, he's completed various science projects, including Current Generation, where he designed, 3D-printed, and soldered components to create renewable sources of light for students in developing countries.

When Aidan is not volunteering or working, you can find him traveling, riding horses, and playing board games with his family.

Aidan is proud to be attending Carleton University, where he plans to graduate with a Bachelor of Science in Computer Science. He hopes to work in the cybersecurity industry where he can help protect communities and organizations from online threats.
